Just now the most important topic in every household is the preparation of the Thanksgiving dinner. Most of us have been through a short season of feasting with our friends here for the Kansas game. Now every one is resting up for that Thanksgiving turkey and all the other accessories of a big dinner. Perhaps you will have out-of-town visitors, certainly you are planning a day of feasting even among your own family. We call your attention to the grocery firms below that promise to see that you have what you want for that one big dinner of the whole year.

For the Thanksgiving Dinner

(These suggestions for a Thanksgiving dinner have been made by Mrs. Annie Fisher, a widely known negro cook in Columbia.)

FRUIT—This can consist of several different fruits served plain in one big dish or the fruits can be chopped up and served with juices in the small dishes as a fruit cocktail.

SOUP—This can be cream tomato or bouillon.

OYSTERS—Scalloped with crackers.

MAIN DINNER—Cranberries, turkey, celery, peas, and potatoes. Usually two vegetables are served with the main dinner. As to the kind of bread served persons can use their own judgment. If they prefer hot biscuits, beaten or plain, it is permissible, but more often light bread is served. People usually eat cold bread with a hot dinner. The pickles and olives can be served with the main dinner or before or after it. Some people like olives and pickles with their soup. They are placed on the table and people eat them whenever they choose.

ICE CREAM AND PIE—These are served side by side. Cake can be served with the ice cream and pie but some serve the pie without the cake. Sliced cheese can also be served with the pie if desired.

COFFEE AND MINTS—The mints are passed as soon as the coffee is served. Salted peanuts, almonds, or other kind of nut can be served with the mint and coffee if desired.

For a less elaborate dinner Annie Fisher gives the following:

FIRST COURSE—Cranberries, turkey, dressing, potatoes, peas, oysters, celery, pickles, and olives. The choice of bread would be the same as in the dinner served in courses. The coffee is served with the main dinner.

SECOND COURSE—Ice cream and pie served with or without cake. Mints are passed at the end of the dinner.
